Abstract *

Across Sub-Saharan Africa, millions of people rely on skills gained through work and practice, yet formal systems rarely recognise their value. With 85.8% of employment taking place in the informal economy, many valuable competencies in agriculture, crafts and digital entrepreneurship remain invisible to formal VET. Africa Re Work grows out of this mismatch. Across Tanzania, Kenya, Rwanda, Ghana, Nigeria and South Africa, the project seeks to connect vocational education with the realities of daily work by acknowledging skills gained through experience, strengthening work-based learning and supporting institutions to respond to real labour-market needs.

Regional insights and the mapping of 35+ indigenous practices will feed into the creation of 10 modular, EQF-aligned microlearning units and 6 multilingual, offline-capable OER packages, designed for adult learners. Change will also take shape inside institutions. The project will support 60 educators and administrators, establish 6 Educator Support Units and put 6 Recognition of Prior Learning and work-based learning frameworks into use. Cooperation with labour market actors, formalised through collaboration agreements, will bring training closer to real economic activity, while 120 learners will take part in pilot pathways suited to low-connectivity contexts.

European added value will take shape through cooperation that continues beyond the project itself. A partnership of 10 organisations (i.e., 4 European and 6 African) will integrate competence-based VET expertise with strong local know-how. Learning resources will be shared openly through EPALE, with 6 policy briefs and 1 Global White Paper extending their reach to 40,000 stakeholders through online and offline channels. Lasting impact will depend on an active Employer Community of Practice and the continued use of RPL and work-based learning upon the end of the project.
